Translation Management

SDL Tridion

SDL*

SDL Tridion Docs and its use of structured content and the DITA standard make translations more accurate, cheaper and faster.

Managing translations is a critical but often costly part of any content delivery process. In addition to managing multiple languages, localized content often involves multiple versions to meet regulatory compliance for various regions.

SDL Tridion Docs translation and localization features

Translations at the click of a button

Translation support is automatically built in with direct integration to industry-leading SDL translation management systems. Because all SDL translation technologies support DITA XML, there's no better way to ensure content translation.

Translation tracking

You can track the status of publications in translation. When used in conjunction with SDL translation technologies, this information is updated in real time, so you can always report on the most up to date publications, cost, time and expected completion dates.

Automated publishing

SDL Tridion Docs fully automates publishing technical content into a variety of formats – allowing you to eliminate desktop publishing for translated versions. The dramatic time and cost savings can then be invested elsewhere.

Translations for a global audience

SDL Tridion Docs enables you to redefine your translation process for in-depth product and service information, allowing faster time to market in more regions.

Key benefits

- Streamlined and integrated translation processes
- Translation reuse
- Automated version management for translated content
- Increased consistency
- Automated desktop publishing (DTP)
- Cost reductions

Multimedia translations

By detecting the language of source images, SDL Tridion Docs only requires a single link to a multimedia file across all language versions of a document.

Manual translation support

Working with a language service provider that doesn't use SDL translation technology? No problem. You can always import and export DITA to and from your preferred localization partner.
